The porch light is on before you even reach the door, and that's the first clue: this one was cared for like a home, not staged like a listing. Step inside and the electric fireplace throws a soft glow across the open living space, the kind of warmth that turns a Tuesday evening into something worth sitting still for. Wide-plank flooring carries you from the living room straight into a kitchen built for real cooking -- granite counters catching the light, stainless appliances humming quietly, a deep stainless steel sink perfect for washing garden vegetables or Sunday dishes. Upstairs, the primary suite is a retreat, with a ceiling fan turning lazily overhead, a walk-in shower, and a vanity with plenty of counter space, plus enough closet space to breathe easy. The guest bedroom carries its own ceiling fan too, keeping the air moving on warm Lowcountry nights. Down the hall, a dedicated laundry area with an upgraded LG stackable washer and dryer means one less errand, one less trip to a laundromat, one more hour back in your week. As an end unit with no neighboring building on one side, this home enjoys extra breathing room and quiet. Outside, the patio backs up to a privacy fence -- string lights overhead, potted herbs and greenery lining it, a spot built for morning coffee or an evening glass of wine while the cicadas start up in the trees. And when you want company, the
